Rationale

Interpretation:: It depends on the unique facts in the recruitment process for this PSA. Specifically, being the family (brother) member of a PSA does not necessary trigger IAWP status. Questions that may help an institution determine if a family member has become an IAWP include:

1. Has the family member coached the PSA or provided other athletic related instruction?
2. Did the family member direct the PSA's recruitment in any way (e.g., serve as a "recruiting agent")?
3. Is the institution comfortable that the hiring of the family member is in no way related to the recruitment of the PSA?

If the institution determines the PSA's brother is an IAWP, that would affect the PSA's potential eligibility at the institution. In that case, the institution may consider filing a waiver for legislative relief.

Specific Case Information

Describe the interpretive request

We are currently recruiting a WBB PSA and also have an open position for a graduate manager in the sport of WBB. Is it permissible for us to hire the brother of the prospect into that position? Other factors: 1. He would be attending classes full time as any other graduate student. 2. The PSA attending CSU is not dependent on the brother getting the position.
